

Central venous occlusive disease is frequently observed in patients with end-stage renal disease” McFall and Lu (2018).

Abstract:

Central venous occlusive disease is frequently observed in patients with end-stage renal disease. Venography remains the gold standard for diagnosis, but intravascular ultrasound is a potentially beneficial adjunct that may positively influence intervention.

You may also be interested in...

Extensive overview of central venous access device complications
Haemodialysis central venous catheter related central venous thrombosis
Mediastinal haematoma following central venous catheter insertion

Full Text

Reference:

McFall, R.G. and Lu, T. (2018) Application of Intravascular Ultrasound in End-Stage Renal Patients with Central Venous Occlusive Disease. Methodist DeBakey Cardiovascular Journal. 14(3), p.196-199.

doi: 10.14797/mdcj-14-3-196.

