We present a case of a female patient with ovarian cancer who had an inadvertent vascular access device implantation in the subclavian artery” Coroleu Lletget et al (2019).

Abstract:

We present a case of a female patient with ovarian cancer who had an inadvertent vascular access device implantation in the subclavian artery, being detected after 10 days. She was successfully treated with a covered stent without immediate complications.

You may also be interested in...

Narrative review addresses vascular access device choice
Medical device classification in vascular access
Night optical device technology enables vascular access in blackout conditions

Reference: