

A mother of a child with a rare immune deficiency disease allegedly administered urine into her nine-year-old girl's intravenous drip while she was being treated at The Children's Hospital at Westmead" The Daily Telegraph (2015).

The Daily Telegraph reports "The alarming allegations were contained in police charge sheets tendered this morning at Cessnock Local Court where the 42-year-old woman appeared over poisoning offences. The former mummy blogger, who in the past has run very public fundraising appeals for her child, is charged with using poison to endanger life or inflict grievous bodily harm and assault causing actual bodily harm."
